Natural wines are wines that are produced with as few additives and interventions as possible. The foundation for this approach begins in the vineyard, which is why organic viticulture is generally considered a prerequisite for natural wine production. Equally important is the winemaking process itself: by avoiding additives and processing aids, the producer aims to create a wine that is as natural as possible.

Because natural wine is typically unfiltered, it often appears slightly cloudy and may resemble naturally cloudy apple juice at first glance. Its flavor can change quite rapidly due to its volatility (volatile acidity), making the tasting experience even more exciting and dynamic. Authentic, hand-harvested, spontaneously fermented, unfiltered and often unsulfured, natural wines always offer a unique tasting experience.

Orange wine is a special style of natural wine. It is a white wine made using red wine production techniques. The white grapes are fermented together with their skins (maceration), allowing the wine to extract more tannins and color compounds from the grape skins. Orange wines are characterized by their deep yellow to orange color and are often slightly cloudy. These wines can vary enormously in appearance, aroma, and flavor, and may require some time for the palate to adjust to their distinctive character.
